Objectivities of Information and Communication

Technology Committee (ICT)

The primary objective of Information and Communication Technology (ICT) in law education is to modernize legal training by replacing traditional methods with digital tools, enhancing research skills, and improving access to legal resources. It enables web-based, interactive learning environments, prepares students for e-courts and electronic case management, and fosters, legal, and analytical skills.

Key objectives include:

Enhancing Legal Research & Knowledge: Providing access to digital legal databases (e.g., Manupatra, SCC Online) for in-depth legislative, regulatory, and procedural information.

Modernizing Pedagogical Methods: Supporting blended and online learning, allowing faculty to store, manage, and share electronic educational materials effectively.

Skill Development: Equipping students with proficiency in electronic documentation, virtual moot courts, and digital advocacy tools to meet modern professional requirements.

Access and Efficiency: Improving access to justice by training students to use technology for virtual court hearings, case management, and speedy legal information retrieval.

Globalized Education: Enabling legal research across jurisdictions, assisting students in comparing legal systems and global judicial views.

ICT integration ensures law students to be prepared for the "digitization of the legal landscape," making the learning process more interactive, faster, and more accessible.
