Abstract: Artificial intellect (AI) is the culmination of numerous technologies that come together to allow robots to think, feel, act and learn at levels of intellect comparable to that of humans. Artificial intelligence has grown in strength in recent years, accelerating scientific study in a variety of sectors and allowing scientists to tackle issues that were previously unsolvable. The amount of data generated by robots and people combined now a day greatly exceeds the capacity of humans to process, comprehend and make sophisticated judgments using this data. All computer learning is based on Artificial Intelligence, which is also where complicated decision making is headed. The application of Artificial Intelligence to research is growing. AI based algorithms are being utilized to increase research productivity and offer fresh viewpoints on subjects that have already been studied. They are useful for generating and testing new hypotheses in addition to making connections between disparate pieces of information. Artificial Intelligence is also utilized to streamline research lab resources, automate data collection and make complex dataset synthesis and analysis easier. There have been claims that AI has an impact on human nature, intelligence and decision making. Concerns have been raised regarding AI's potential effects on people, including the possibility that they will encourage prejudice in human mental processes. A frequent worry is that machines will eventually outsmart humanity and take over. Nevertheless, AI is demonstrating itself to be a potent instrument for bridging knowledge and generating fresh hypotheses in every study. This paper provides an overview of the technology and the use of Artificial Intelligence in many fields, with a focus on the subject of research.

Keywords: Artificial Intelligence, Human Being, Searching Techniques, Research Field

Introduction

The role of Artificial Intelligence (AI) in academic research has garnered significant attention in recent years. This transformative technology powered by machine learning algorithms, data analytics and is revolutionizing the research landscape. By enabling researchers to process vast amounts of data extract meaningful insights and automate repetitive tasks, AI has the potential to accelerate the pace of scientific discovery and enhance the quality of research outcomes. As AI continues to evolve, it is essential for researchers to adapt and embrace this powerful tool while also being mindful of its limitations and ethical implications¹. By striking a balance between AI driven automation and human ingenuity, researchers can unlock new possibilities, advance scientific knowledge and contribute to the transformative potential of AI in the realm of academic research. In the near future intelligent machines will replace human capabilities in many areas. AI is the study of intelligent machines and software that can reason, learn, gather knowledge, communicate, manipulate and perceive the objects. AI is different from Psychology because it emphasis on computation and is different from computer science because of its emphasis on perception, reasoning and action. It makes machines smarter and more useful. AI has the advantages over the natural intelligence as it is more permanent, consistent, less expensive, has the ease of duplication and dissemination, can be documented and can perform certain tasks much faster and better than human.

AI has brought about significant changes to academia, revolutionizing the way research is conducted, knowledge is generated and education is delivered. The integration of AI technologies in academia has the potential to streamline processes, enhance research outcomes and foster innovation. Another area where AI is making a significant impact in academia is in education. AI powered technologies are being used to develop intelligent tutoring systems, adaptive learning platforms and personalized educational experiences². Similarly, the application of AI in research has grown tremendously with a focus on automation of research techniques from generating a hypothesis to conducting experiments.

Meaning of Artificial Intelligence

Artificial Intelligence is a simulation of human intelligence into a computer machine so that it can think and act like a human. It is a technology that helps a computer machine to think like a human. AI aims to mimic human behaviour. AI also known as machine intelligence, is a branch of computer science that focuses on building and managing technology that can learn to autonomously make decisions and carry out actions on behalf of a human being. AI is not a single technology. Instead, it is an umbrella term that includes any type of software or hardware component that supports machine learning, expert systems, generative AI and certain types of robotics³.

In the real world, AI systems are specialized tools designed to perform specific tasks, such as image recognition, language translation or data analysis. Artificial Intelligence leverages computers and machines to mimic the problem solving and decision making capabilities of the human mind. The use or study of computer systems or machines that have some of the qualities that the human brain has, such as the ability to interpret and produce language in a way that seems human, recognize or create images, solve problems and learn from data supplied to them. In other words, it can be defined as programming such machines which can think and act with some level of human intelligence is known as Artificial Intelligence⁴. In it many fields are combined like Philosophy, Psychology and Computer Science.

Artificial Intelligence in Academic Research

Artificial Intelligence has found numerous applications in academic research across various disciplines. Following are some examples of AI is being used in academic research,

- Natural Language Processing (NLP): NLP techniques enable computers to understand and generate human language. Researchers use NLP to analyse large volumes of textual data, extract information, summarize documents and detect sentiment. It has applications in fields like Literature, Linguistics and Social Sciences.
- Computer Vision: Researchers use computer vision to analyse medical images, satellite imagery and surveillance footage among others. It has applications in fields like Biology, Astronomy and Environmental Sciences.
- Robotics and Automation: AI powered robots and automated systems are increasingly being used in academic research to perform tasks such as lab experiments, data collection and sample processing. These robots can work 24/7, reducing human error and increasing efficiency in research workflows.
- Recommendation Systems: AI algorithms can provide personalized recommendations based on user preferences and behaviours. In academia, these systems can suggest relevant research papers, conferences or collaborations based on a researcher's interests and previous work.
- Simulation and modelling: AI techniques, such as machine learning and neural networks can be used to create complex models and simulations. Researchers can use these models to study and predict phenomena in fields like Physics, Economics and Social Sciences.
- Knowledge Discovery and Synthesis: AI can assist researchers in discovering and synthesizing information from vast amounts of existing research papers, patents and other academic sources. This can help identify research gaps, find relevant literature, and generate new insights⁵.

Scope of Artificial Intelligence in Different Fields

Education: Education is an important part of life for everyone and a good education plays a vital role to have a successful life. In order to improve the education system for the students, there are always a lot of changes happening around the world, ranging from the way of teaching to the type of curriculum. Artificial Intelligence is a thriving technology that is being used in almost every field and is changing the world. One place where AI is poised to make big changes is in education.

AI in education has given a completely new perspective of looking at education to teachers, students, parents and of course, the educational institutions as well. AI in education is not about humanoid robots as a teacher to replace human teachers, but it is about using computer intelligence to help teachers and students and making the education system much better and effective. In future, the education system will have lots of AI tools that will shape the educational experience of the future.

In the education system, there are various activities which take lots of time of teachers such as grading tests and home works. These tasks require lots of time and effort, while this time could be used in interacting with students, letting them know their errors, teaching new things and many more. To save this time, AI can be used. With AI tools, it is possible to automate the grading system for nearly all types of Multiple Choice Questions and fill-in-the-blank and they are very close to being able to grade written responses⁶. However, AI is still not possible to truly replace human grading, but it's getting improving day by day. By using AI, teachers will get more time to fill the gap in their classroom rather than investing their time in these tedious tasks.

Teachers always have a critical role in the education system, but this role and its requirement may change with the new technologies. AI can automate different tasks such as grading, reports, help students while learning and may also be an option of real world tutor in some cases. AI can be included in different aspects of teaching. AI systems can be programmed for providing expertise to students, a place where students can ask their doubts and could take the place of teacher for teaching basis course materials. In such cases, AI could change the role of the teacher as a facilitator⁷.

AI is developing day-by-day, it is possible that machines can identify the facial expressions of students while learning the concepts can understand if they are finding any difficulty in learning and according to that make changes in the way of teaching. However, currently, such things are not possible, but they might be possible in the near future with AI Powered machines and software. The main aim of Artificial Intelligence in education is not to completely replace teachers. Instead, it aims to act as helping hands for teachers as well as students.

Entertainment: The entertainment industry is the most creative industry in the world today. Constant and valuable changes are required to make it successful. If you make the same kind of films people get bored and do not want to see the stuff. They want to see something new always. The movie topics, actions, stories, music, dance, sports everything has to be new to entice people. If it catches the fancy of the people there is a lot of money in it for the producers and directors. Technology is a game changer for the entertainment industry. Artificial Intelligence and Machine Learning (ML) have become the fancy of the most creative artists in the world today. To a large extent, AI will be responsible for the future success of the entertainment industry. AI in entertainment refers to the use of Artificial Intelligence technologies to create, distribute and personalize content in the media and entertainment industry. This includes using AI algorithms to assist with tasks such as content creation, distribution, recommendation and engagement. AI is being used in various forms of entertainment, including film, television, music, gaming, virtual reality and social media. For example, AI algorithms can be used to generate new forms of content, such as virtual reality experiences, interactive video games and personalized news articles⁸. AI can also be used to assist human creators in tasks such as video editing, sound design and special effects. In addition, AI can be used to personalize content for individual users based on their preferences and behaviour.

Criminal Justice System: The judicial system in India is not reformed due to the pendency of cases, shortage of judges and officers, long hearing dates along with lengthy court procedures. All these issues lead to delaying justice, which is equivalent to the denial of justice. To restore the effectiveness of the judicial and law enforcement systems, Artificial Intelligence needs to be incorporated into the justice administration system.

AI can help improve the efficiency of law enforcement agencies in many ways. This includes the introduction of biometric details such as the face, speech, blood group and fingerprint details of various suspects to ease the investigation process and tracking of criminals. AI based technology can be effectively used to guide investigation officers on investigation procedures. It reduces the possibility of procedural errors by officials. Further, an AI enabled digital database containing details of offences, modus operandi and similar offences committed at different places can also be created.

In the Courts, AI is being used for:

- Decision making: AI can be used to help judges make decisions about bail, sentencing and parole. This can help to ensure that decisions are fair and accurate.
- Risk assessment: AI can be used to assess the risk of recidivism for offenders. This information can then be used to make decisions about sentencing and parole.
- Case management: AI can be used to automate tasks such as scheduling hearings and managing case files. This can free up court staff to focus on other tasks.
- Legal research: AI can be used to analyse legal documents, statutes and case precedents to assist lawyers in finding relevant information quickly. These AI powered tools can save hours of manual research and enable legal professionals to focus on higher value tasks, ultimately improving the efficiency of the legal system⁹.

Further, with the help of forensic analysis, an AI powered system can be used to identify the minute biological materials present at the crime scene. The materials include blood, urine, saliva, hair, semen, fingerprints, etc. It is made possible by using AI with cognitive data analytics, identification and similarity pattern extraction features. AI programming, along with big data, can help in the identification of crime spots by interacting with space and time related information. Likewise, an outbreak of theft in one area may help predict similar activities in surrounding areas. The evidence collected at the crime spot can provide a clue regarding the prior use of the same weapon with the help of an AI enabled database. AI algorithms can help in discovering pattern signatures in gunshot analysis. It is used to detect bullet waves to determine available guns and estimate the possibility of legal authorities in the investigation.

⁹ <https://www.legalserviceindia.com/legal/article-13251-artificial-intelligence-in-criminal-justice-system.html>

AI can also help jail authorities to maintain a vigil on criminal activities going inside or near the jail premises. With the help of AI based surveillance systems and Drone technology inside jail premises, unlawful activities can be monitored easily and efficiently.

Use of AI by the Judicial System

AI based database having a copy of decisions would make this tedious task easier. AI based technology can be used to record the statements made before the court without any manual errors. It allows transparency in conducting trials. Manual execution of process involving issuing of summons or notices, presence of witnesses, next date of hearing, etc. leads to undue delay in timing. An AI based system can be used to reduce latencies and ease the trial process. The use of AI can summarize or make the contents of legal documents precise so enabling judges to grant these interim orders quickly¹⁰.

While dealing with criminal cases, a judge has to take various decisions like granting bail to the accused, etc. With the help of AI powered machines, these decisions are made simpler, which can aid judges in determining the outcome of cases.

AI based translation software named SUVAS (Supreme Court Vidhik Anuvaad Software) has been launched by the Apex Court to translate English judicial documents into nine vernacular languages. It will help laymen understand the court's legal documents and proceedings. The Supreme Court, in association with the National Informatics Centre, has also launched an official multilingual mobile app to provide real time access to the status of court proceedings, circulars, reports and other law related information to litigants, advocates and citizens¹¹. The app is available on IOS in English, Hindi, and six other regional languages. Another example is the SUPACE (Supreme Court Portal for Assistance in Courts Efficiency) portal of the Supreme Court which helps analyse large amounts of data pertaining to case filings, making it easier for judges to differentiate the important facts and issues in a new case.

Use of AI by Law Firms and Legal Professionals

AI is useful for advocates in producing discovery responses, responsive pleadings and other documents just by uploading the complaint or discovery request with jurisdictional requirements. Legal motion is an AI based platform that helps advocates and professionals in speeding up the process of litigation. AI trained machine learning algorithms are used to perform the classification and clustering of different types of documents by detecting the hidden similarities among them.

AI can also help with analysing contracts and reviewing documents. A well known firm named Cyril Amar Chand Mangaldas, in association with Kira Systems introduced AI based machine learning software that enables the identification and analysis of risky provisions or clauses in agreements by searching through extensive volumes of online databases¹². Deploying an AI solution can create a positive momentum throughout a law firm. As attorneys come to trust AI software, they can relax and let the computers attend to the monotonous details. No longer stuck in the weeds, these attorneys are more likely to engage in strategic problem solving, which can enable them to enjoy their work more.

Significance of Artificial Intelligence in Research Field

The role of Artificial Intelligence in academic research has garnered significant attention in recent years. By enabling researchers to process vast amounts of data extract meaningful insights and automate repetitive tasks, AI has the potential to accelerate the pace of scientific discovery and enhance the quality of research outcomes. Artificial Intelligence has brought about significant changes to academia, revolutionizing the way research is conducted, knowledge is generated and education is delivered. The integration of AI technologies in academia has the potential to streamline processes, enhance research outcomes and foster innovation.

One of the primary significance of AI is changing academia is through data analysis. Researchers can leverage AI algorithms to analyse vast amounts of data quickly and efficiently. This enables them to identify patterns, correlations and trends that may not be easily discernible through traditional methods. Furthermore, AI is transforming the research process itself. It can assist researchers in literature review and knowledge synthesis by automatically scanning and extracting relevant information from a wide range of scientific papers¹³. This not only saves time but also helps researchers stay up-to-date with the latest advancements in their field.

Another area where AI is making a significant impact in academia is in education. AI powered technologies are being used to develop intelligent tutoring systems, adaptive learning platforms and personalized educational experiences. These technologies can analyse students learning patterns and provide tailored feedback, support and resources. Moreover, AI has the potential to augment human capabilities in academia. It can automate repetitive tasks, freeing up researchers time to focus on higher level cognitive activities. This includes automating data collection, analysis, and even manuscript writing. By streamlining these processes, researchers can devote more time to critical thinking, hypothesis generation and exploring new research avenues. By striking a balance between AI driven automation and human ingenuity, researchers can unlock new possibilities, advance scientific knowledge and contribute to the transformative potential of AI in the realm of academic research.

Artificial Intelligence has found numerous applications in academic research across various disciplines. Some examples of how AI is being used in academic research are,

- Data Analysis and Pattern Recognition: AI algorithms can analyse large datasets and identify patterns, correlations and trends that may not be easily recognizable by humans alone. This is particularly useful in fields such as Genomics, Climate Science, and Social Sciences.
- Natural Language Processing (NLP): NLP techniques enable computers to understand and generate human language. Researchers use NLP to analyse large volumes of textual data, extract information, summarize documents and detect sentiment. It has applications in fields like Literature, Linguistics and Social Sciences.
- Computer Vision: AI based computer vision systems can process and interpret visual data, such as images and videos. Researchers use computer vision to analyse medical images, satellite imagery and surveillance footage among others. It has applications in fields like Biology, astronomy and Environmental Sciences.
- Drug Discovery and Development: AI is being used to accelerate the process of drug discovery by predicting the properties and interactions of potential drug compounds. Machine learning models can analyse vast amounts of chemical and biological data to identify potential drug targets and design novel molecules.
- Robotics and Automation: AI powered robots and automated systems are increasingly being used in academic research to perform tasks such as lab experiments, data collection and sample processing. These robots can work 24/7, reducing human error and increasing efficiency in research workflows.
- Recommendation Systems: AI algorithms can provide personalized recommendations based on user preferences and behaviours. In academia, these systems can suggest relevant research papers, conferences or collaborations based on a researcher's interests and previous work.
- Simulation and Modelling: AI techniques, such as machine learning and neural networks, can be used to create complex models and simulations. Researchers can use these models to study and predict phenomena in fields like Physics, Economics and Social Sciences.
- Knowledge Discovery and Synthesis: AI can assist researchers in discovering and synthesizing information from vast amounts of existing research papers, patents and other academic sources. This can help identify research gaps, find relevant literature, and generate new insights¹⁴.

¹⁴ Dmytro Spilka, How Is Artificial Intelligence Re-Shaping Research?, Published in Tech Radar & TNW, July 11, 2022.

The future of AI in academic research holds immense potential for transformative advancements. Here are some trends, opportunities and potential impacts to consider:

- Interdisciplinary Collaboration: AI brings together researchers from different disciplines, fostering collaboration and enabling breakthrough insights.
- Data Driven Discoveries: AI algorithms extract valuable insights from large datasets, revolutionizing research across disciplines.
- Personalized and Adaptive Learning: AI technologies provide tailored educational experiences, assessing student performance and offering targeted feedback.
- Enhanced Scientific Discovery: AI assists researchers in hypothesis generation, experiment design and data analysis, accelerating the research process.
- Ethical Considerations and Responsible AI: Researchers address bias, transparency, privacy and accountability to ensure ethical and responsible AI use.
- AI Enabled Automation: AI streamlines research workflows, automating tasks like data collection and analysis, improving efficiency.
- AI for Global Challenges: AI contributes to solving climate change, healthcare and poverty by analysing data and optimizing resource allocation.
- Augmented Creativity: AI serves as a creative partner, generating ideas, synthesizing information and pushing boundaries in fields like Art and Design.
- Enhanced Peer Review and Scientific Communication: AI automates aspects of peer review, aids in language translation and recommends relevant research papers.
- Democratization of Research: AI platforms provide access to computational power, datasets and collaboration opportunities globally, democratizing research.

Finally in my opinion, it has been asserted that AI affects the nature of humans, their intelligence and the decision making process. With the advent of AI, there is concern over how its creations could affect human beings, including encouraging biases in human thought processes. A common concern is that machines would become smarter than humans and thus gain control. Regardless, AI is proving a powerful tool for connecting information and drawing new hypotheses.

Conclusion

Artificial Intelligence is a field that enables machines to think conceptually and analytically. The last 20 years have seen a tremendous contribution from AI approaches in several fields. AI will keep becoming more and more significant in a variety of industries. AI is crucial to research because it may speed up advancement in a variety of sectors by automating difficult operations, analyzing enormous volumes of data, finding patterns and providing insights that would take a long time or be impossible for humans to accomplish. The talented side must provide sufficient assistance for AI to reach its full potential. AI makes it seem as though the world is at your feet, which makes choosing the appropriate footwear even more important. AI is a major game changer for this planet, offering amazing levels of human augmentation along with fascinating research fields and never before seen applications. Let's take advantage of this opportunity.

In general, I support changing our perspective on AI from one of a replacement to one of a supplement to our research. Put differently, we ought to think of AI as an ally or collaborator that supports human labor. Collaborative intelligence is the term for this AI paradigm, in which AI and humans work together to solve issues. Instead than viewing AI as a threat to our existence, we might investigate how researchers can collaborate with it.

VBCL Law Review

ISSN No. 2456-0480

VBCL Law Review is the flagship journal of Vaikunta Baliga College of Law, Udupi, which is one of the oldest law colleges in Karnataka producing several eminent scholars of national and international repute. The Law Review is a refereed journal published annually in the field of law. This journal is a sincere effort to create a forum for discussions on emerging issues in different branches of law. In this process, the journal encourages submissions not only in the field of domestic laws but also in different areas of international law. In order to promote inter disciplinary approach; the journal also welcomes submissions relating to interplay between law and society, law, science and technology, law and ethics etc. Since our endeavour is to publish best of the well-researched papers, we have a dedicated peer-review team consisting of experts in different branches of law.

EDITORIAL

Dear Readers,

It is with immense pleasure that we present to you the VBCL Law Review, 2024. This marks the first issue of our Annual Law Journal since it was indexed in the prestigious UGC-CARE Listed Journals.

In the ever-evolving and dynamic legal spectrum, research and publication play a crucial role. Academic writing is intrinsically linked to rigorous research, serving as a reflection of both the depth of inquiry and the researcher's understanding of their chosen area of study. The importance of ethics and integrity in legal research cannot be ignored. Research in law not only influences academia but also impacts policy-making, judicial reasoning, and societal transformation. Upholding the highest standards of academic integrity ensures that legal scholarship remains a reliable and credible resource for all stakeholders, including law makers, law practitioners, research scholars, and students.

Unethical practices such as plagiarism undermine the very foundation of research and erode trust in academic contributions. On the other hand, research grounded in ethical principles contributes to building a robust body of knowledge that addresses contemporary challenges with fairness and objectivity. As custodians of the legal fraternity, we have a shared responsibility to encourage research that not only explores new frontiers in the legal domain but also adheres to the principles of honesty, transparency, and accountability.

The VBCL Law Review 2024 is presented in two volumes. As usual, we have tried to include contemporary legal issues encompassing judicial education and training, human rights, data protection, environmental issues, legal theories, plea bargaining, gender identity etc. I acknowledge my gratitude to all authors who have contributed research papers to VBCL Law Review.

I would like to express my gratitude to our management, all the eminent members of the editorial board, and the Peer Review Committee for their relentless support and commitment to uphold the standards and integrity of this journal.

With Regards

THE IMPACT OF ANALYZING THE EFFECTIVENESS OF ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION METHODS IN DIVORCE CASES

Dr. N.D. Gowda*

ABSTRACT

With a burgeoning population and an overwhelming backlog of cases, the Indian judiciary faces formidable challenges. Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) methods offer a promising solution by providing efficient and accessible avenues for dispute resolution. In family law cases, where emotions often run high and tensions can escalate quickly, finding a way to resolve disputes peacefully and efficiently is crucial. Mediation and ADR are two methods that have gained popularity in recent years due to their ability to help families navigate legal challenges while minimizing conflict. Mediation can be a highly effective method for resolving family law disputes, such as Divorce, Child Custody, and Property Division. In addition to mediation, there are other forms of ADR that may be used in family law cases. These include Arbitration, Collaborative law and Negotiation. While each method has its unique characteristics, they all share a common goal of avoiding traditional courtroom litigation. Exploring ADR methods in Divorce cases can be highly beneficial for divorcing couples seeking a more efficient, cost-effective and amicable resolution. ADR methods can be particularly useful in family law cases because they offer more privacy and flexibility than traditional litigation. Additionally, these methods often result in more tailored and creative solutions that better address the unique needs of the family involved. By promoting legal awareness and demystifying ADR methods, this approach seeks to cultivate a culture of dispute resolution outside of traditional litigation. The information contained in this article reflects the author's view and is believed to be correct at the date of publication. However, it is necessarily of a brief and general nature and should not be relied upon as a substitute for specific professional legal advice. As ADR gains momentum, it can not only alleviate the burden on the courts but also foster a more equitable and efficient justice system, ultimately contributing to a more harmonious society in India

INTRODUCTION

In the 21st century, people are trying alternative methods for solving their disputes instead of the traditional legal system, these methods and systems are called Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) methods. Disputes or conflicts are dynamic in nature and are usually resolved inside a courtroom or outside it. States are adopting new policies and measures to resolve disputes beyond the traditional legal system, which is groaning under the backlog of pending cases. In this context, ADR or different ways people can resolve a dispute without trial has become popular. ADR is encouraged due to a number of advantages, such as, flexibility, privacy, easy in procedure, cost effectiveness and speedy resolution of disputes. The right to a speedy trial is an inalienable right and is an important facet of the right to life and personal liberty under Article 21 of the Indian Constitution as observed in the case of *Hussainara Khatoon v. State of Bihar*¹. ADR refers to a set of practices and techniques aimed at permitting amicable resolution of legal disputes outside courtrooms. It includes mediation, arbitration, negotiation, conciliation, and a variety of hybrid processes by which a neutral person who is appointed by the parties in the disputes, facilitates the resolution of legal disputes through consensus. During Divorce proceedings, children are the inadvertent victims of legal tussle, as couples attack each other personally. The court proceedings only vitiate the atmosphere by escalating distrust and anger as the sole objective of both the parties is to defeat the other, dividing family members into two hostile camps². This lack of accommodation by the legal system in resolving family disputes is one of the reasons for the introduction of ADR as an alternative mechanism for resolving family disputes. A courtroom is not an ideal place to settle hurt and emotional feelings, since family disputes, have a traumatic effect and the legal system does not openly respond to emotions ranging from disappointment and anxiety to depression, sadness, grief, anger, and trauma faced by the parties.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF ADR SYSTEM

The concept of ADR is not new in to India. India has had a historical legacy of settling disputes, alternatively, through panchayats even before the Britishers came in and established their authority. ADR can prove to be a panacea not only for business disputes, but also for matrimonial and family disputes where it not only impacts the parties involved, but also the future of their children. The process established its roots in family disputes after the mid 1970s. With the change in time and increase in the number of cases the method of ADR became more popular because it gives freedom from the long courtroom trials and is economically suitable to the parties.

Families can get into conflict over many different issues like domestic disputes, restitution of conjugal rights, breakdown of marriage, testamentary and intestate property issues, childcare custody, Divorce and separation, maintenance and eldercare. Disputes can also take a wide variety of forms, including physical, sexual, financial, verbal, and psychological. ADR, meanwhile, can resolve differences and conflicts in an amicable and congruous manner, by encouraging communication. Even the provision of the Indian matrimonial legal system touts the idea of an amicable end to differences. As time passed, ADR started to be practised in the form of gathering discussions, panchayats, family councils etc. It was considered as a cheap and easy way to obtain justice³. Moreover, mediation is considered the first choice of the parties to the dispute to resolve the issues, especially in case of family disputes⁴.

In India the need to evolve alternative mechanisms simultaneous with the revival and strengthening of traditional systems of dispute resolution has been reiterated in reports of expert bodies. Each of these reports saw the process of improving access to justice through legal aid mechanisms and ADR as a part of the systemic reform of the institution of the judiciary coupled with substantive reforms of laws and processes.

ANALYSIS OF THE STATUS OF ADR IN FAMILY LAWS

The ADR system is not a new phenomenon, it has been in India since time immemorial. The ancient method of conflict settlement made a substantial contribution to the resolution of issues involving family, social groupings and property disputes. Maintaining peace and harmony is the most important factor to consider while settling family conflicts. ADR is based on the principle of amicable dispute resolution and mediation is one such procedure that allows the parties to get down and focus on what they genuinely want, rather than what they need to pursue or what the law would allow them to fight for. Family dispute mediation is a method in which a mediator, an unbiased third party, assists in the resolution of family problems by encouraging voluntary agreement among the parties. The family mediator facilitates communication, promotes understanding and directs members' attention to their individual and shared goals⁵. The family mediator assists the parties in considering their choices, making decisions, and reaching their own agreements.

The legislature is responsible for making and amending laws, but the judiciary is responsible for developing and interpreting them to meet the demands and conditions of society. As a result, unless and until the beneficial provisions of India's matrimonial legislation promoting and advocating reconciliation in matrimonial disputes are favourably interpreted and strictly applied by the courts, the letter of the law may be an illusory mirage that only exists on the statute book. As a result, it is the solemn responsibility of matrimonial courts in India to guarantee that the mandatory settlement efforts are really implemented, and parties are encouraged to actually unlike them for out-of-court settlements. As a result, the courts bear a heavy burden to fulfil this solemn responsibility, failing which it will be impossible or ineffective to enforce reconciliation measures in matrimonial disputes in the Indian jurisdiction⁶. As a result, it would be most valuable to identify and quote some recent high-profile Indian court decisions that have emphasised and highlighted the critical importance of beneficial Indian laws that mandates reconciliation procedures.

In *Bini v. K.V. Sundaran*⁷, the High Court of Kerala had to decide on a unique question, whether conciliation is compulsory after the introduction of the Family Courts Act, 1984, even on the excluded grounds of conversion to another religion, renunciation of the world, mental instability, venereal illnesses and leprosy. Calling the Family Courts Act, 1984 a special statute and its provisions to make attempt at reconciliation mandatory at the fine instance, the High Court held that, though no attempt at reconciliation is required under The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, in a petition for Divorce on the grounds of conversion to another religion or other grounds excepted under Section 13 (1) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 or on similar or other grounds available under any other law, the Family Court is bound to make an endeavour for reconciliation and settlement after the introduction of the Family Courts Act, 1984. The requirement is mandatory. The Family Courts Act of 1984, which is a special statute, is responsible for this conceptual change.

The Court further said that “the primary objective is to promote and preserve the sacred union of parties to the marriage. Only if the attempts for reconciliation are not fruitful, the further attempt on agreement on disagreement may be made by way of settlement”.

EFFECTIVENESS OF ADR METHODS IN DIVORCE CASES

Divorce cases can be particularly contentious and emotionally charged. The adversarial nature of traditional litigation can often amplify these emotions, making it harder to negotiate and reach an agreement. ADR methods provide a more collaborative and respectful approach, which can help couples maintain a positive relationship, especially if they have children. Additionally, ADR methods can be more efficient and cost effective than traditional litigation. Court cases can drag on for months or even years and the costs can quickly add up. ADR methods, on the other hand, can often be completed in a matter of weeks or months and the costs are typically lower. Finally, ADR methods allow couples to have more control over the outcome of their case. In traditional litigation, a judge makes the final decision, which may not be in either party’s best interests. With ADR methods, the couple has more input and can work together to find a solution that works for both of them⁸.

Divorce can be a distressing and emotionally challenging process for all parties involved. Traditional litigation often exacerbates the tension and can result in prolonged court battles, leaving both spouses dissatisfied with the outcome. However, there is a growing shift towards ADR methods, which offer couples a more amicable and efficient way to navigate the complexities of Divorce.

Exploring ADR methods in Divorce cases can be highly beneficial for Divorcing couples seeking a more efficient, cost effective and amicable resolution. Mediation, Collaboration, Arbitration and Settlement Conferences offer viable alternatives to traditional litigation, empowering

8 <https://www.familylawattorney-irvine.com/blog/2019/november/what-are-the-benefits-of-alternative-dispute-res/>>accessed 29 September 2024, 5.45pm couples to take charge of their Divorce process and craft agreements that address their specific needs. By embracing these alternatives, individuals can transition into the next phase of their lives while minimizing emotional and financial strain.

I. Meditation:

Mediation is a voluntary and confidential process where a neutral third party, known as a mediator, facilitates communication and encourages compromise between Divorcing couples. Unlike litigation, mediation empowers both partners to have direct input in decision making, allowing them to craft their own agreements regarding property division, child custody and support. This process tends to be less adversarial, fostering better post-Divorce relationships and reducing the likelihood of future disputes.

II. Collaborative Divorce:

Collaborative Divorce is another ADR method that promotes cooperation and mutual problem solving. Each spouse hires a collaboratively trained attorney and all parties, including lawyers and other professionals, such as child specialists or financial neutrals, sign an agreement to work together respectfully and honestly. Collaborative Divorce aims to find creative solutions that prioritize the individual needs and interests of both parties and any children involved.

III. Arbitration:

Arbitration offers Divorcing couples the opportunity to present their case to a neutral third party, called an arbitrator, who acts as a private judge. Unlike mediation, the arbitrator makes a binding decision after hearing both sides. This method provides a faster and less formal alternative to traditional litigation, allowing couples to avoid the lengthy court process while maintaining some control over timing and outcome.

IV. Settlement Conferences:

Settlement conferences involve couples and their attorneys meeting with a judge or a neutral third party to discuss the specific issues of their Divorce case. This process often takes place well before a scheduled court hearing, allowing the parties to explore settlement possibilities. Settlement conferences encourage open dialogue, clarification of concerns and potential compromises, encouraging resolution without the need for a trial⁹.

BENEFITS OF ADR

Divorce processes takes a lot of time when it goes to court for trials. This is so because it takes time for the court to set specific dates, prepare for trial, gather evidence, etc. As ADR is handled outside the courtroom, they will be settled within a few months and will not be dragged all along. In courtroom cases, it will be one party winning and the other losing. This results in bitterness and creates a lot of tensions between the couple who are dissolving the marriage. It might have an everlasting impact on the children of the divorced couple, if any. ADR helps to bring down these sorts of negative effects and allows the couple to make their own decisions regarding the dissolution of their marriage and this has very high chances of being a win-win situation for both the parties.

In addition to advocate's fee, other litigation expenses are also involved, including court costs. Hence, ADR mechanism saves a huge expense, by staying out of this litigation. People always like to control the situations that they are under, especially when it comes to sensitive and personal matters like divorce which have a very direct impact on their future. While a couple goes to a courtroom to get the problem decided upon and then it is left to the Judge to decide upon the fate of the lives of the couple. Whereas in ADR, the couple themselves who analyse the problem and voice out their issues and lay down the contentions by themselves.

ADR may not be appropriate in highly contentious Divorce cases. But when both spouses are willing to be transparent and compromise, ADR can help relieve the emotional and financial burdens that you might experience while going through Divorce¹⁰.

The chief benefit of ADR for divorce cases is the emphasis on cooperation and collaboration. The adversarial nature of conventional litigation had the tendency to exacerbate rifts and conflict between family members, with children often taking the brunt of the negative consequences. With ADR methods like Mediation and Collaborative Divorce, the parties took the reins of their future without court intervention. Another benefit of ADR is the potential cost savings it offers to the parties. This aspect of ADR is particularly beneficial to parties who are open to compromise, as it eliminates court costs and minimizes attorney's fees¹¹.

ADR also provides the parties with more privacy than courtroom litigation. Laws regarding judicial transparency keep case filings and records open to the public. In contrast, the details of ADR proceedings are kept private for the most part. This also allows the parties in a Divorce to be more candid, knowing that their personal affairs won't be aired out for the public to see.

ADR is a good option to resolve family law issues. Here are some advantages to consider:

10 Manasa.R.V , 'Alternative Dispute Resolution Mechanism and Divorce' International Journal of Multidisciplinary Educational Research, Volume:12,11(3), November: 2023, p,97

11 Sarah. M. 'Alternative Dispute Resolution in Divorce' [June 4th, 2021.] <https://www.litowichlaw.com/alternative-dispute-resolution-adr-in-divorce/>

- I. Cost-Effective: ADR processes such as mediation and arbitration are generally less expensive than going to court. They often involve fewer legal fees and less formal procedures.
- II. Time-Saving: ADR can often resolve disputes more quickly than litigation, which can be a lengthy process due to court schedules, procedural delays, and backlog.
- III. Flexibility: Parties have more control over the process and outcome in ADR. They can choose the mediator or arbitrator, as well as the time and location of sessions.
- IV. Preservation of Relationships: ADR methods focus on collaborative problem solving, which can help preserve relationships between parties, especially in situations where ongoing interactions are necessary, such as when children are involved.
- V. Confidentiality: ADR proceedings are generally private, whereas court proceedings are often matters of public record. This confidentiality can encourage parties to be more open and honest during negotiations.

However, there are also some cons of ADR. They include:

- I. Lack of Formal Structure: ADR processes may lack the procedural safeguards of the court system, leading to concerns about fairness.
- II. Enforceability: While arbitration awards are enforceable like court judgments, mediation agreements may not have the same level of enforceability unless they are submitted to the Court for approval and adoption as an order.
- III. Lack of Precedent: ADR decisions do not create legal precedents, which mean that similar disputes may be resolved differently in the future.
- IV. Risk of Deadlock: If parties cannot reach a resolution through ADR, they may still end up in court, which could prolong the dispute and increase costs.

CONCLUSION

Embracing ADR methods can significantly streamline the Divorce process and lay the groundwork for positive future relationships. When selecting an ADR method, it's essential to consider the unique circumstances and goals. Additionally, ADR can make Divorce much easier on the children. With Mediation, Collaborative Divorce or Arbitration, we will ultimately spend less time in court, allowing the concerned persons to spend more time with them. In addition, custody, visitation and parenting time arrangements can be worked out through ADR eliminating the need to involve your children in the case.

However, there are certain situations where ADR might not be appropriate. If there are allegations of substance abuse, Domestic Violence or child neglect or you are certain that your spouse will not be honest with financial disclosure it may be best to litigate your case in court. The success of ADR in dissolving the marriage depends totally on the willingness of both the parties to communicate openly, compromise and seek mutual solutions. Hence, using ADR methods helps to get a free and fair, unbiased solution to the dispute of dissolution of marriage involved. It also helps minimise emotional and financial stress. The integration of ADR into the fabric of the Indian legal system not only has the potential to unclog overburdened courts but also to empower individuals with a more expedient, cost-effective, and just means of resolving conflicts.
